10 Resources for New Faculty

As new members of the University community, incoming faculty may not be aware of the many resources available to them that can help their teaching and support learning. Below are a few links to University resources that we hope may be useful to you. Click on any of the titles below to find more information.

Reinert Center for Transformative Teaching and Learning (CTTL): The Reinert Center offers a number of resources for part-time and full-time faculty as well as graduate students. All services conducted through the Center are non-evaluative and confidential. Reinert Center staff are available for consultations with instructors who wish to discuss evidence-based teaching methods. Consultations may occur in a single session or in regular, ongoing meetings. All such consultations are driven by the instructor's goals. Other services include classroom observations, small group feedback sessions (SIGFs), workshops, and online resources. More information about our services can be found [\[click here\]](#). The Reinert Center also offers a number of grants and fellowships related to teaching as well as several certificates in the University Teaching Skills program.

Information Technology Services (ITS): ITS is the primary support provider for all University classroom and department technologies. ITS offers both in-person and online support. For emergency issues with classroom technology, call 314-977-4099 or ask.slu.edu.

SLU Research Guides - Research guides created and curated by SLU Librarians.

Library Resources - Offers information on how to print materials, how to put course items on Electronic Reserves, Copyright guidelines, and more.

Calendar of University Events - A helpful general calendar of events to find out what is happening around campus.

Faculty Senate - "The Faculty Senate is the principal organ and voice of the faculty in matters of University-wide concern, and it is the primary means by which the faculty members of the University participate in the governance of the University as a whole.[SLU Faculty Manual, Sec II.E.]"

Employee Well-Being Resources - A site to help find programs and resources for physical, intellectual/financial, emotional/spiritual well-being.

Academic Support for Students - Information from the University's Student Success Center on how students can get academic support. Includes information about the Writing Center, tutoring services, and Center for Accessibility and Disability Resources (CADR)

Resources for Current Students - This site offers a lot of useful information for many of the frequent questions related to student concerns outside of class. From meal plans, a calendar of dates, and how to apply for financial aid, this site may be a good first stop to help you find answers to students' concerns.

The Office of Graduate Education. Offers information on academic support for graduate students.
